We were so disappointed to find that they were filmed in Europe, with Euro- peans playing the characters. This is not Becker’s first trip to the Continent: in 1975, he went west more than what she thought humanity could tolerate.

“This is such a huge country,” Beck- ner continued. “We opened, and the people were friendly. In Germany, I could sit down at a coffee shop for hours, and we would never say more than hello. ‘Here people talk to you like you’re an old friend.’”

That friendly and open nature suits Becker’s artistic style, as she often employs collaborative efforts in her art. Becker, whose work has been exhibit- ed internationally and has been fea- tured in several publications is “asking for assistance from the public with her latest project.”

To help Becker with her “Fenwicks” project, find a postcard—designed by your- self or embellished as you see fit—and add some lines giving your personal def- inition of the good life” on the post- card’s back side.

Becker notes that some people will send lots of postcards and come to the KHN-Center for the Arts on Feb. 19, and she said that “grate- fully, the way one person can help another has been provided with the Center.”

The postcard project will last for a month, and those who make them have made sure they are made for the world.

Attending School in a Soddy

I love it when my readers submit stories about how we teach our children.

It tells me that some- thing in our school hero- system is working to give every student the same chance at success.

This week's column is by Ron F. Prochnow, principal

At Twenty-six Mile School.

This school was not a rural school in the traditional sense.

It was located on the north end of the Twenty-six Mile Juvenile Justices' treatment center.

The school was a self-contained classroom located next to the center.

The students at Twenty-six Mile School were all juveniles who had been adjudicated delinquent or were in need of special education services.

The school provided an educational program designed to meet the unique needs of these students.

This program included individualized instruction, small class sizes, and a structured environment.

The teachers were trained to work with the students' individual learning styles and to focus on their social and emotional needs.

The curriculum was designed to be responsive to the students' interests and to provide them with opportunities to develop their skills and knowledge.

The school also offered a variety of extracurricular activities, including sports, music, and art.

The students at Twenty-six Mile School were highly engaged in their education and were making significant progress academically and personally.

The school received wide acclaim for its innovative approach to education and for its success in improving the lives of its students.

The success of the school continued to be recognized, and it received numerous awards and accolades.

The school remained committed to its mission of providing a high-quality education to all of its students, and it continued to inspire others to think differently about education and what it is possible to achieve.

Directors sought for NNRD board vacancies

The Nemaha Natural Resources District is still looking for someone to fill a vacancy on its board of directors.

One position in Nebraska City and one position in Falls City are vacant since no one ran for the jobs during the November, 2018 general election.

The NRD’s board of directors will accept written applications from interested, potential directors. Applicants must be registered voters who also meet all other eligibility requirements for holding an elected office.

They must also reside within the appropriate boundaries of the position they seek.

Both positions are two-year terms, due to a recent change in state law that requires any position vacated within the first 19 months of the term to come back up for election in the next election cycle.

NRD board members are normally elected to four-year terms and fill positions of vacant general primary elections in even numbered years.

Twenty-one members serve on the Nemaha NRD board and represent 10 subdistricts, two directors per subdistrict, who are elected in alternating election years.

One member of the board travels a couple of miles from throughout the entire district.

In Nebraska City the position is available in Subdistrict 4, which was previously represented by John Albright until his death in September in that same position.

It includes a portion of southern and eastern Nebraska City as well as the rural areas in McWilliams precinct and the town of Talman and Lorton. Dan Hedges is the other director in Subdistrict 4.

In Falls City the vacancy is in Subdistrict 10, which encompasses all of Falls City but no rural areas. This position was most recently held by Bruce Walker, who chose not to run in this year’s election. Also representing Subdistrict 10 is Jim Gerweck, who was reappointed at the January meeting to fill out the remainder of the vacancy.

Nemaha NRD board meetings are held in Tecumseh on the second Thursday of each month. Generally, these meetings are held in the evening. Board members are eligible to receive $5 per mile reimbursement of mileage and other expenses incurred while conducting NRD business. Individuals interested in one of these positions should address a letter requesting appointment to the Nemaha NRD Board of Directors, 62621 Hwy 136, Tecumseh NE 64850, no later than Wednesday, May 16.

The goal of the Nemaha NRD for Research Network is to put in place a statewide on-farm research program addressing critical farmer production, profitability and natural resources questions.

Growers take an active role in the on-farm research project sponsored by UNL Estes in partnership with the Nebraska Corn Growers Association and the Nebraska Corn Board.

The February program will provide an overview of the research conducted on-farm research share their results from the 2012 growing season.

Pre-registration is required by calling 402-642-4522 for the Feb. 17 program at the ARDC.

The turning point in the game, as in transition and posted another four half points in transition, scored 12 of their 20 first quarter, but the Knight couldn't get any closer as Falls City hit five free throws down the stretch to seal the game.

In looking back at the contest, Coach Tyson said his team has to learn from its mistakes as well. Against some of the better teams it has faced, the Lourdes team has been guilty of self-destructive mistakes.

“Of the four games that we have lost, it’s the same M.O.,” said Coach Joe Tyson. “We are not taking care of the ball. We are not running our offense.”

It was actually the running game, as in transition basketball, that allowed Falls City to bounce back after being down by nine points in the first half. "That was key to the break," said Tyson. "They got to take these opportunities on offense."

Lourdes had just one player in double figures to lead Falls City, Alex Hogeland, one.

The Tiger's second half is ready for something different, Coach Wissing said his team feels positive after Friday night dual action. Parker won the match decision by fall, Darin Sornson works toward a pin at 182 pounds.

Despite a loss to a good team, "We know what we need to do," said Wissing. "That was our team mind set.""They only had four Opportunities to get better." "Right now, we are doing the same things against good teams. I am ready for something different," said Tyson. "We're got to take these opportunities in the right direction now fading into its history."

Although disappointed by the result, the Nebraska City team knew it was in for a daunting challenge against Gretna. "They’re so good in every aspect of the game," said Coach Wissing. "If we don’t play perfect, we are not going to have much success." "They are the No. 1 team in the state for a reason." "We just get into a rhythm and it worked out for us on the second half," said Wissing. "I don’t think we did anything different." From this game’s final two quarters.

The Dragons entered the Western Midlands Conference tournament on Friday night dual action at Norris. They instead focused on rhythm and it worked out for us on the second half. Dear Amy:
I am a 56-year-old woman stuck in a non-good relationship that has turned stale and neglectful. My partner “Steve” and I met 14 years ago during a rough time in both of our lives. I was in a bad long-term relationship and he had just survived cancer. We seemed to have so much in common and got along so well, we assumed we were compatible and distaste, sometimes spending nights away from home with no explanation.

But over the years, things have changed. Steve is a great provider. But I get so depressed about this relationship that I could spend an entire day in bed, mooning over this very idea. I know I need to leave this relationship, but I don’t know how to get my partner to stay. Any advice you can offer would be much appreciated.

Deb

Dear Deb:
Instead of gathering ideas on how to get your partner to stay, I think you should take his absences as a sign that he is trying to communicate with you. Now he seems aloof and distant. There is no value in a relationship that has turned stale and neglectful.

I urge you to break off the relationship and find someone new. He is not a good provider. He may financially support your household, but he is not willing to be intimate, truthful and understanding. Your value is too high to accept a less than stellar partner.

Amy

I have news for you: He is not willing to be your full-time provider. Instead of gathering ideas on how to get your partner to stay, I think you should take his absences as a sign that he is trying to communicate with you. Now he seems aloof and distant. Two local historical groups invited the community to a gathering on the evening of Jan. 26 to collect more information about the history of Nebraska City, and to inform the public on their progress.

The Nebraska City Main Street Historians in conjunction with the Nebraska City Historical Society held a two-hour Update Gathering at the Fox Center on Central Avenue to gain more historic information of downtown buildings and to verify information that had already been gained.

Nebraska City Main Street Historians volunteer Jim Kuhn spearheaded the group’s project of gathering information about Nebraska City’s downtown business district. It’s been a two-year process.

“First of all, I’d like to thank everyone for coming and looking back into history here in Nebraska City,” Kuhn said to visitors at the event. “We’re very proud of our history. That’s one of the reasons that we’re doing all of this.”

Kuhn, who does a lot of volunteer work for the city, said it all began when he would see people walking around town wondering what the different buildings and structures used to be.

“That kind of inspired me. So I went and took all of the pictures (of the downtown district) and then just started putting the group together two years ago because we need to know (what buildings used to be),” he said.

People attending the event went from table to table looking at old photographs of former downtown businesses. People also saw many relics, including Nebraska City Sanborn maps from 1883 to 1946, directories, phone books, publications, locals, hotels and information on display. Guests dined on “historical” appetizers at the event as well.

Kuhn said the Nebraska City Main Street Historians group focuses on the history of the downtown business district, which includes 16th Street down to Missouri River along Central Avenue — formerly known as Main Street. The group also dives into the history of the downtown businesses on 1st Corso and 1st Avenue. The Nebraska City Historical Society focuses on the entire history of the community.

Some interesting little tidbits that Kuhn shared was that there used to be an ice cream factory and a microbrewery business down by the river, and Arbor Bank has been located in four different places.

Even though Kuhn was born and raised in Beatrice, he’s passionate about unveiling the downtown business district’s past.

“But I’ve been here for 30 years and I know a lot of people, and I live in Nebraska City because of the way that I was treated when I moved here and that got me going. It’s like I’ve found my home,” he said. “It’s time that somebody steps up and starts gathering all of that information and writing it down somewhere so that we have that information.”

Kuhn said the group is operated by volunteers, who he recognized at the event.

“I’m so proud of these ladies that are doing this,” he said.

Pat Martin is also a volunteer of the Nebraska City Main Street Historians. Martin said she became a member because her and her husband, Darell Martin, have had a business on Central Avenue or Main Street for at least 55 years.

The Martins have owned a barber shop, beauty shop, pawn shop and bookstore on Central Avenue. They are the owners of Martin’s Jewelry & Gifts, which is also located on Central Avenue, and have had the business since 1981. Martin’s Jewelry was known as Ernstene & Wolf Jewelers and Optometrist from 1912-1949, and was then a jewelry store called Weberings from 1949 to 1981.

Kuhn said the Main Street historians want to erect plaques in the front windows of every downtown district building in the future. The plaques would tell the history of the building and perhaps show photographs of the buildings. He also would like to incorporate QR codes on the plaques so that people with smart phones can scan more information about that building on a web site.

“We’ll find a way to pay for it so that nobody needs to be out (money), but it will say when the building was built, what all has been in it and pictures of the building,” he said.

Kuhn said anyone who wants to attend the Nebraska City Main Street Historians meetings are welcome. The group meets on the first Monday of the month at 1 p.m. at the Morton-James Public Library, located at 923 1st Corso.
